There are situations in life when an inner voice quietly asks: does what you are doing really make sense to you?

There are times like today when fear and resignation spread, but also the fire of anger and rebellion.

But we all also have experiences that fuel the fire of our desire to bring something long missing into our own lives.

Who am I? Where do I come from? What is my gift? And what is my task?

Pursuing these questions brings us closer to our core and thus also to our self-worth and self-love. No one can reliably tell us who we are. Because we carry the answers to these questions within us as a guiding principle. We can only unearth them ourselves. For this, we need the cooperation of the unconscious and the unknown. Suitable means for this are silent and artistic media, symbol and ritual work. And people who encourage us to follow our inner impulse and remain true to it even through “hard road sections”.

Our life purpose is the linchpin. If we are in contact with it and the gifts given to us for it, we have found an inner lighthouse and can no longer be easily controlled by others. On the contrary, ancient myths speak of a “daimon”, a “guardian angel” or ancestors being at our side to ensure that we follow the path of our self-chosen life image.
